Circle Of Concern Wants to Send 100 Kids to Camp this Summer, and YOU Can Help!

VALLEY PARK, May 3, 2018 . . . Oftentimes, children suffer from the life circumstances of their parents. For the children of Circle of Concern clients, the cost of summer camp is often too high for their parents who are struggling to pay for basic needs like groceries and utility bills. Circle hopes to change that scenario by raising enough money to send 100 children from low-income families to camp this summer through its summer camper program.

Circle of Concern estimates it will need approximately $11,000 in summer camp assistance to send 100 kids to camp. The organization will pay up to $120 per kid for day- or sleep-away camps, ball teams, swimming or music lessons, and many other types of summer enrichment programs.

Cyndi Miller, executive director of Circle of Concern Food Pantry, said, "Our ultimate goal is to bring all the fun activities of summer within reach to those who otherwise might miss out. Summer programs aren't "just camp". They are enriching activities that provide many benefits including leadership and relationship skills, healthy habits, stress reduction, time management and self-confidence, to name a few. This ultimately improves how children understand the world and how they can fit in to it."

Miller adds that camp activities also provide low-income parents the practical support of safe, supervised activities for their children – often while the parents are at work. Additionally, low-income kids miss out on many opportunities, simply because their families don't have the discretionary funds to pay for extracurricular activities.
